I found this lizard sunning itself on a green leaf by our back gate. We see geckos and lizards often but not like this one with the bumps running along down his spine. He didn’t move while I took my photos, which has a flash, but when I went back outside an hour later, he was gone and was never to be seen again. I don’t know if this guy had any teeth because he was very still watching me watch him. He looked like he might dart away any second. His eyes did not have lids and they moved around in his head. He did not change color or camouflage during the time he was under observation.
